Motivations for linguistic form

---

All languages have particular sentence types for:

- ❑ Statements
- ❑ Questions
- ❑ Requests/orders

- (1) Er hat in Jena studiert.
- (2) Gehst du dorthin?
- (3) Schließen Sie bitte die Tür.

- (1) He studied in Jena.
- (2) Will you go there?
- (3) Please close the door.

The structure of sentence types is arbitrary i.e. language-specific), but the existence of sentence types is motivated by general communicative functions of language.

Motivations for linguistic form

All languages have to indicate grammatical relations.

- (1) The man saw the boy.
- (2) The boy saw the man.
- (3) Der Mann sah den Jungen.
- (4) Der Junge sah den Mann.
- (5) Den Mann sah der Junge.
- (4) Den Jungen sah der Mann.

The linguistic device that is used to indicate grammatical relations is arbitrary, but the distinction between different grammatical relations is motivated by general functional considerations.
